Community invitation to share experiences on climate change

(London, Ontario) — Environmental groups and local conservation authorities invite the community to participate in the fifth biennial Sharing Experience workshop; this event will bring together like-minded people from across the region to share their views on the environment.

Sharing experiences help individuals and community groups to create positive changes. This year's workshop focuses on youth engagement and climate change. It is an opportunity to share ideas on environmental change. Since 2016, more than 500 participants representing over 150 different community-based environmental groups attended this workshop and contributed to conserving nature.

This year's workshop features keynote speaker Jeff Yurek, vice-president of Environment Conservation Change Association and Dr Jefferey Chaucer, Scientist, Western University.
